Kirjaudu sisäänLuo uusi tiliElävän musiikin esityspaikkaTyykkääTykätty Simon Richardson steps back in time to a world of infighting and the great arcade ban must be my favourite of Leeds venues. It's not as luxurious as victoria's borough or as claustrophobic as Thornton's arcade, and has much more variety than that of the Queen. For the last 20 years alone, this has been home to Restaurants, takeaways, arts and crafts shops, delicatessens and even a super metal club. Domino's Club must be the first cum-speakeasy jazz club under the barberer's that has graced the Grand Since its inception in 1897. Strange, this. And while many of the newcomers to the Grand Arcade over the years have had short-lived laps, the Domino Club is entering its third year, and in seemingly good health. After hearing great things, I ventured downstairs to find out more. I feel like I'm coming out of the cinema after a particularly absorbing film in a not-so-classic style of modern life, you walk through the back of the storefront. There is a concierge, politely informing us that there is no entrance fee, but rather a proposed donation of 2 Lischet, which helps pay for the almost nocturnal live music, as well as contributing to the initiative to get young people involved in the music. I say goodbye to my money happily as I've ever made my way to a bar. Enter dominoes through the back of the barberroom If you asked me to close my eyes and paint what I imagined a club domino look like, I'd get it pretty much a spot on – except that everything I draw looks like it was done by a blind sheep with a paintbrush in its mouth. It's very dark - it's very dark, and the walls are covered in black-and-white prints from the prohibition period. I notice that everyone is well aligned, which really helps my OCD, and there are some stalls at the far end of the club if you prefer a quiet drink to the live music. The back bar looked promising - packed with American bourbon and bourbon - but before I could take them all, we sat down, gave us menus, provided water and presented some snacks. It's so dark that my partner doesn't recognize the food as bombay mixture until she eats the most lettuce piece, much to my amusement. It's time for a drink to wash away the giggles. I use my skilled alcohol beacon to track down boilers and go straight for an IPA/corn whisky combo (£8.50), which acts as the perfect liberator, while my partner has a bay of plenty (£8.50) - long rum, coconut and my non-tea pineapple cocktail, But keeps her quiet for a good 20 minutes. The live music performs at 9:30 p.m. on the nose; A mix of classics of 20, 30 and 40 that sees some brave souls get up for boogie, (what are you doing?! sit down! this is England, the British don't dance!) and the atmosphere really gets to its waters. Bay of Plenty (£8.50) Devil's Made Care (£8.50) Completely dazzling devil might care (£8.50), perfect balance of sweet rum and sugar cane, bitter Campari. We also sample over Lorde (£8.50) – a very long mixture of cognac, jackal and cherries liqueurs, an incredibly gentle nightingale (£9) with a hint of plum and fantastic egg white foam, and an Oscar cure (£8) – I chose it mainly because it shares a name with my friend's two-year-old son (hey, Oscar!) – but it's actually the best cocktail of Sage decoration provides an aroma that is properly reminiscent of tobacco. I should mention that Domino's also offers a very good selection of wines, beers and whiskey; In particular, liquid breaks a weekly tiebreaker – a special whiskey that should be very expensive, but usually served at 3.5 lischet until it disappears. It is, in my opinion, worth coming on its own. Oscar's Drug (£8) Boilermaker Soft Corn (£8.50) but there's plenty to like about dominoes besides the booze. They have the atmosphere, the décor and the music up to the tee, and the service is excellent; A welcome but professional in a way that reminds you of when they're trying to recreate. And, of course, when we leave, I feel like I'm going to the movies after a particularly absorbing film; It takes me a good 10 minutes to adjust to reality and remember that it's unacceptable to indiscriminately hurt people for being smart -- or to wear armrests. I found my thrill, all right. But it wasn't at Blueberry Hill, wherever it is; It was in the Grand Arcade of Leeds.
